DECLARATION OF ANTHONY SMITH

- 1. On August 20, 2012, around 9 p.m. I answered a knock at my door.
- 2. A man with a flashlight greeted me and handed me paperwork saying it was a subpoena for me to appear in court because "I was in a lot of trouble."
- 3. He asked me if I knew what the subpoena was for and I told him that I truthfully had no idea.
- 4. He proceeded to explain to me that the lawsuit had to do with computers and hacking—at that point I thought they had the wrong person until I saw my name on the paperwork.
- 5. He continued to tell me that I was in a lot of trouble and that I should get an attorney immediately.
- 6. At that point he handed me his business card. On the back was written John Steele's name and phone number.
- 7. He said that John Steele was a big deal attorney from Washington, D.C who had no interest in the case but wanted to help me negotiate a settlement, and that I should call him.
- 8. Instead of contacting Atty. Steele, I contacted my friend who is an attorney.
- 9. My friend looked over the paperwork and put me in touch with my counsel in this matter, Jason Sweet.
- 10. After speaking with Atty. Sweet, I learned for the first time that John Steele, in fact, represented the Plaintiff's law firm.
- 11. The Plaintiff claims that I accessed their websites without authorization to download and distribute its content to others. I am, and always have been, innocent of these allegations.
